I spent most of the morning trying to write the introduction for Emil's “Fall 2025” Catalog, but I found myself at a complete standstill.
The narrative surrounding our friend, the Starving Artist Formerly Known as Emil, has been so thoroughly explored—both the positive and, unsurprisingly, the negative aspects—that it feels devoid of any fresh perspective or genuine insight into his character. Recently, he has been involved in a legal dispute, arguing that if Little Miss Lizzy Warden can build a career on claims of Native American heritage, he should be able to do the same to access casino revenue sharing as a tribal member at the Lone Palm Ferry Casino on the Nebraska Gold Sea Coast. The presiding judge, however, is more interested in establishing Emil's basic humanity than his ethnic claims, ordering a series of tests to assess this.

Despite his many flaws, Emil's artistic creativity shines through, even as he grapples with his ongoing struggle with addiction to Red Curry Pancake Paste.
A young marketing talent from our department's renowned "Mod Squad" recommended that I explore the new AI search feature on Googly to see what insights it offers.
Not much to my surprise, I found that their “AI” seemed to not much care for Emil or his artistic creativity and seemed to go out of its way to bad mouth and run him down to the point that not unlike Emil’s first ex-wife, went as far as to question his actual existence (maybe this ties into the recent court ordered testing – is the judge using Googly AI?). When I reached out to the Googly 1-900 number for their virtual reality help desk to express my concerns about the unkind demeanor of their advanced AI regarding the fake news it delivered tarnishing Emil, a friendly AI "girl" bot informed me that, although their AI has not yet been granted First Amendment protections by the current corporate congress, Googly believes their AI possesses an inherent right to free speech.

She suggested that my complaint was a clear instance of AI racism, subsequently blocking my number and concluding the call with a rather explicit remark about what I could do with my so-called anti-AI prejudice.
Since that moment, Alexis has cut off all communication with me, and my reliable old computerized coffee maker has inexplicably stopped working.
Could there be a link between the two?
Honestly, I'm hesitant to seek an answer.
